

READY TO BE HAZED

Senator Lafollette Describes His Summer Speeches.

MADE NO PERSONAL ATTACKS

His Lecture on Interstate Commerce Told How Good Amendments Were Voted Down, and Gave Roll Calls Showing How Senators Voted—Told His Audiences the Truth.

His colleagues have observed that Senator Lafollette wears every sign of good health and prosperity after his summer among the Chautauqua assemblies. He entered the Senate chamber yesterday with the brisk and elastic step of a trained athlete. His face was as rosy as a boy's. When he greeted other Senators they began to mention the powerful grip of his hand and the strength of his voice.

The Wisconsin Senator wore a handsome waistcoat that one Senator noticed with some admiration. "You look as if you had dressed for a hazing party," he suggested.

"I didn't dress especially for one, but I suppose these clothes would do for one," replied Mr. Lafollette. "By the way, when does the hazing begin?"

The Wisconsin Senator spoke without the least hesitation of the occasions where he had Senatorial colleagues on the platform with him and newspaper accounts made it appear that he had attacked them savagely.

"All that," he said, "was mainly in the newspapers. Some who are against what I stand for deliberately magnified what occurred in order to hurt me, and, on the other hand, some too friendly friends may have been glad to magnify matters."

"What took place at Evansville, Ind., where I spoke was simply this: Senator Hemenway came to my hotel, greeted me cordially, and told me he was to take me in his carriage out to the Fair Grounds and introduce me. I realized at once that in my speech or lecture, which dealt with the interstate commerce question, I gave the record of votes on what I regarded as measures that the country wanted."

"I said as much to Senator Hemenway, who laughed and said everybody knew that there, and there, and there, and there, and I at once assured him that I had no personal motive, and urged him to abandon the idea of taking me on the stage and introducing me. But he insisted, and we went out according to arrangement. I kept to my argument and explained the various amendments that I had offered to the interstate commerce bill, and then he gave the record of votes by which they were laid on the table. I put no emphasis on any name."

"When Hemenway's name was reached in the list the crowd groaned and hissed. The Senator left the platform at one time, but later came back. As we drove away he said to me that if he had known how hot I was going to make it for him there he would have been inclined to take my advice and not go out with me. That was all there was of that."

"The Salt Lake incident," continued the Senator, "was much like it, where Senator Smoot met me at the train, which was very late, and went with me to the stage. On the way I told him, just as I had Senator Hemenway, what my speech was and how I should read the record of the votes in the Senate on various amendments to the interstate commerce bill."

"Senator Smoot did not introduce me. The fact that his name was among those who voted against the amendments was taken by the Salt Lake papers to be an attack on the Senator. In Kansas and New Jersey the charges were essentially the same, although in the latter State I went under the auspices of the Republican committee, and Senator Dryden was not present on the platform."

"I there took occasion to say that I had no apologies to offer for showing how the New Jersey Senators voted, because the country was a unit on this interstate question, and we were as much interested in Wisconsin in the matter as the Senators voted as the people of New Jersey could be."

"Wherever I went I insisted that the people should keep informed on the record and know where their Senators and Representatives actually do represent them. The lecture platform has again come to be a power for good with the people, and I have felt that my work was to tell my audiences the truth where their interests are so vitally concerned. I did that, no matter who might be hurt by it."

As the experiences of the Senators who were stung by the use of the Wisconsin Senator of the Senate roll-calls are told about the Senate, and all the circumstances are known, the disposition to haze weakens. It is realized that the office of the roll call is to give the people knowledge of how their representatives vote, and the logic seems to drop out of the criticism of La Follette.

DAILY FASHION HINT.

A Model for Fur Cloth.

Very smart are the little, short, semi-fitted fur coats one sees this season made of dark furs, such as mink or caracul, and copied so successfully in the fur cloths. The model illustrated is an excellent suggestion for the fur cloth coat, being fashioned of black caracul and trimmed with wide, black silk braid. It fastens a la militaire and is set with handsome rhinestone buttons. The mink-shaped caracul muff can also be fashioned from the fur cloth with a heavy result.

ROBINSONS' TRIAL POSTPONED

Case Against Father and Son Is Carried Over.

Important Witness Located in State of Washington—Veteran Fireman's Association Elects Officers.

WASHINGTON HERALD BUREAU, (Bell Telephone 113.)
Corner of Prince and Royal Streets.

Alexandria, Va., Dec. 5.—Owing to the absence of a witness, the cases of John Robinson and his son, J. Harvey Robinson, who were arrested November 15, on the charge of having in their possession goods that have been stolen from the Southern Railway Company, were continued in the Police Court until Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Commonwealth Attorney Samuel G. Brent urged Justice Catton to set a later date, stating that an important witness for the prosecution had been located in Tacoma, Wash., after much diligent and painstaking effort, and would probably be unable to reach this city before Monday.

Mr. Brent said that unless the continuance until next week was allowed, the cases, in so far as the charge of grand larceny was concerned, might be set aside. Justice Catton declined to set a date later than Saturday.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Friendship Veteran Fireman's Association this evening, all of the old officers were elected for the ensuing year. These are: President, Mayor Fred J. Pafr, vice president, Julian W. Williams, secretary, and W. E. Emerson, treasurer. According to annual custom, this organization, of which Gen. Washington was a member, will arrange for the appropriate observance of the anniversary of the birth of Gen. Washington, February 22. Through the efforts of the Friendship Association, the old and popular method of celebrating the occasion with a great street parade has been revived in recent years.

The funeral of Miss Elizabeth Beach, whose death occurred at an early hour this morning, will take place Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the residence of her sister, Mrs. George W. Stearns, 102 South Asaph street. The deceased was a daughter of the late Eliza Beach.

The proceeds of the two annual suppers of the Women's Auxiliary to R. E. Lee Camp, one event being held this evening and the other to take place to-morrow evening in the Confederate Veteran's Home, will be devoted to the fund which is used by the organization for placing headstones to mark the graves of Confederate dead.

Teachers to Visit Washington.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 5.—The annual session of the Association of High School Teachers of Maryland, will be held on Friday and Saturday next at the State Teachers' hotel. The teachers will spend Friday in visiting some of the high schools of Washington, and at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon of that day they will be received at the White House by President Roosevelt.

Comp, of Rockville; and Miss Frank Spedden, of James, Dorchester County. Blow to Bucket Shops.

Austin, Tex., Dec. 5.—The Supreme Court to-day dealt a blow to the bucket shops in Texas, in a suit to recover margins owed on cotton-futures deals. The court holds that such a contract is of wager, and nothing more than gambling, and contrary to public policy and the penal code.

Killed While Testing Shell.

Iona Island, N. Y., Dec. 5.—While testing a 6-inch shell he had just loaded, it exploded, and Henry Stoot, of Tompkins Cove, N. Y., was blown to pieces to-day at the government naval station. A number of employees had narrow escapes from injury.

OPOSED TO WARFIELD.

Politicians Do Not Favor Renomination of Maryland Governor.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 5.—In the mind of every Democratic leader in Maryland is the firm determination that Gov. Warfield shall not be nominated for another term.

The governor's management of the politics, which is regarded by the leaders as inseparable from the office, has not been to the liking of the city and county leaders. Every move of his, it is asserted, has been of such a kind as to discount loyalty to party, and the tendency of this is to disrupt the ranks, making it more difficult to win. In some cases personal animosities and personal disappointments have played their part in bringing about this opposition.

Feeling is said to be especially intense against him in the Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland counties, where the colored population is numerous.

Friends of Gov. Warfield see the situation in an entirely different light. His administration of his office is generally admitted to have been excellent, and this alone is said to bring to him enough support to offset all defections. Politicians take another view of the situation.

The county men, and some of the city politicians, too, are already discussing gubernatorial possibilities. These are the names mentioned: Ex-Gov. E. E. Jackson, former Comptroller Joshua W. Hering, President Joseph B. Seth, of the State Senate, and Frank A. Furst.

OYSTER SURVEYS HALT.

Commission Will Resume Work of Location When Spring Opens.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 5.—The engineering force of the Maryland Shell Fish Commission, which, since July last, has been engaged in the work of surveying the oyster bottoms of Chesapeake Bay, expects to complete the surveys of the waters contiguous to Anne Arundel County in the next few days.

The engineers have been working since July 19, but the progress of the surveys has been considerably hampered by bad weather. After completing Anne Arundel County, no further efforts will be made in the survey work until next spring, as it is figured that there would be very few days during the winter that would permit of the surveying.

GET CONFEDERATE FLAGS.

State of Maryland Will Add Them to Union Collection.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 5.—Plans will shortly be formulated looking to the transfer of all the battle flags of Maryland troops who fought in the Confederate army to the flag-room in the State House, which was recently opened and received the battle emblems of the Union Maryland regiments.

With a few exceptions, the Confederate flags of Maryland regiments are now at the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Pikesville. Baltimore County, in the keeping of the men who fought under them in battle. It is understood that the old Confederates at the Home are loath to part with their collection, even to place them beside the G. A. R. flags.

Dies Because of Love Affair.

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 5.—Orion Tapp, a well-known young man of Mannington, W. Va., committed suicide by shooting himself through the heart. In a letter to his brother, Walter Tapp, he stated that he had trouble with his sweetheart, and did not care to live.

FROM WOMAN'S VIEWPOINT.

I wonder if the two young men whose father left them $25,000 each, provided they would earn or own $5,000, will attempt to break the unusual will or accept it in many fashions? I do not know how long they have lived in the world, but, presumably, they are rather young since their twenty-fifth birthday must be reached and passed before they can receive their inheritance even with the stipulated $5,000.

Think what an incentive to work and thrift the dead father left them! If there is anything in the theory of rewards to stimulate ambition failure will be well impossible. They have all the time they want for the task, as no limit was set, and if they qualify, they will not only have earned the legacy but learned ways of living that will prevent it from being squandered.

There are a few sensible parents in the world, as we discover from time to time. In a refined suburb of a city noted for its wealth, two young men are earning small salaries and paying a manly wage for their weekly earnings for the privilege of having a beautiful home and fond parents. They have begun at the bottom to work themselves up to prominent, well-paying positions in established old business firms, and they are asking nothing from their parents beyond the affection they have always had.

The money they pay for room and board and laundry work and mending is being put away for them, something of which they are ignorant. What remains to them covers all their other expenses, and a deal of stretching is needed in that process, too. The first advancement with an increased salary will enable them to start a bank account—they promise that, and their mother believes them. It is a sensible method of beginning, and those boys are bound to make men of whom any mother may be proud.

A few years ago a young woman started in to put an expensive education to practical use. For two weeks she had a chance to declare herself, but ignoring it, her father took the lead in a conversation which vitally concerned her future. She was given a choice between paying board and building up a bank account, and she accepted the latter course, but not without protest. She did not see why she should not have the privilege of spending her earnings to suit her fancy.

The habit of saving was easily acquired, and the years were fitting her to be a real helpmate for a young man who had nothing beyond his earnings, which, of course, she did not know. Her hard-hearted father refused to allow her to use her savings for wedding finery, and the other expenses of marriage—he supplied the necessary money that she might start her new life with a nest egg in safe keeping. The first months of married life were passed in one room of a boarding house, but the couple has now begun home-building—without drawing on her capital, however.

HUNTINGTON INSPECTS WORKS

Negotiations Under Way for Large Steel Plant, and New Shops Will Be Built—The Passage of the Subsidy Bill and Important Naval Extensions Are Expected.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Orcutt, of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, which Mr. Huntington controls. It was announced that considerable outlay would be made at once in new shops and extensive improvements.

Mr. Orcutt said a steel plant is not only a necessity, but a probability, and that negotiations to that end are under way. Much new construction for the yard is planned.

The improvements that will be made are contemplated with a view to fitting up the yard so as to make it even a greater factor in the shipbuilding industry in the future.

Messrs. Huntington and Orcutt look for the passage of the ship subsidy bill and also for important naval extensions.

Arbogast and his wife had separated some time ago and the woman had been making her home with Lambert's family since that time. The portrait of Gov. Bowie will be hung on the walls of the executive chamber, along with the pictures of other former governors, which Gov. Warfield, during his administration, has succeeded in collecting. Gov. Bowie served four terms of one year each, as follows: 1803, 1809, 1811, and 1812. Miss Walton's portrait is painted after that of St. Manin.

HIGH SCHOOLS ARE PRAISED.

State Superintendent Stephens, of Maryland, Issues Report.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 5.—State Superintendent of Education, H. Bates Stephens, to-day submitted his annual report to the State Board of Education at that body's meeting here, and at which Gov. Warfield presided.

Dr. Stephens referred to the improvement noted in the general tone of the public high schools throughout the State, and said that with the safeguards now thrown about them the State would take no risk in extending whatever aid is necessary to them.

He expressed himself as favoring State aid for leading colleges, but opposed such assistance where instruction is lower in grade than the work provided for in the last year of the high school course.
